LITTLE AMERICA LEGACY

When Carol and Earl Holding, a young couple running an orchard business out of northern Utah, were invited by S.M. Covey, the founder of the original Little America, to take on management of the property, they jumped on board and moved their lives up to the busy travel center and hotel off the I-80 in western Wyoming. As they stepped into any and all roles in the business, Carol particularly enjoyed waiting on tables in the bustling Coffee Shop. She loved chatting with the customers and exchanging stories with the many truck drivers just passing through.

A center of good, made-from-scratch meals and even better company, The Coffee Shop was conceptually replicated at the “New” Little America in Salt Lake City, which the Holdings eventually took on ownership of, along with the original travel hotel in Wyoming. In Salt Lake, The Coffee Shop quickly became a central part of the community, and remains a staple of the downtown food scene for locals and visitors alike.
